Q: Can I use a Nikon D3100 with a Nikon Df for basic photography? Can I use a Nikon D3100 with a Nikon Df for basic photography? For example, taking photos with a neutral gray background with a neutral gray sky. I only want to use the 50mm f/1.8 lens. A: It depends on how you're using that camera: if you're just using it as an inexpensive tool for this particular project, then sure, as long as you're not operating things like a motorized zoom or autofocus while shooting and you're not otherwise using the D3100 as a control for a "prosumer" camera. If it is, however, acting as a main or backup camera for your other more expensive equipment, then no, as there's a whole host of features the D3100 lacks.

Evaluation of host and tissue factors associated with the pathogenesis of chronic rhinosinusitis. Chronic rhinosinusitis is a complex inflammatory disease involving mucosal inflammation, tissue remodeling, and immunologic responses. Many studies have reported associations of different host and tissue factors with the clinical manifestation of this condition. To better understand the pathogenesis of chronic rhinosinusitis, we evaluated host and tissue factors in specimens obtained during endoscopic sinus surgery. Host and tissue factors that were evaluated by Western blot analysis included the defensins, β -defensin 2 and secretory leukocyte proteinase inhibitor (SLPI); cytokines and chemokines; enzymes; matrix metalloproteinases; scavenger receptors; and other inflammatory mediators. Using multiple analytical techniques, we found differences in levels of host factors in specimens that showed pathologic evidence of infection (group B, n = 52) or alteration of epithelial barrier integrity (group C, n = 38) compared with specimens from sinusitis patients without evidence of infection or epithelial damage (group A, n = 15). The differences observed were (1) β -defensin 2, SLPI, and matrix metalloproteinase-7 levels were higher in groups B and C than in group A, (2) tumor necrosis factor alpha, interleukin-8, and cyclooxygenase-2 levels were higher in group B than in group A, (3) tissue inhibitor of metalloproteinase-1 levels were lower in group B than in group

SANDY, UTAH: UTV enthusiasts from around the world are pouring into Sandy, Utah to compete in the 24th Annual UTV Invitational off-road race. This unique event spans three mountain ranges and seven parks. Including public lands in Utah, Idaho, and California. It's a one-of-a-kind adventure that requires the skills and equipment to conquer off-road terrain using bicycles, snowmobiles, dune buggies, and motorcycles. Everything from speed to stealth to camping is in play. This is made possible by the owners and operators of the event, Park City Mountain Resort and a plethora of partner companies and individuals. The UTV Invitational is held in conjunction with Wintermute, a Utah based E-Industries company. Branded each year as the largest off-road motorsports competition in the world, the UTV Invitational is hosted by the same non-profit organization each year. The volunteers that make the event possible are a great motivator to have on your team. From terrain management to logistics to sponsorships, the UTV Invitational has an unparalleled level of passion for the sport. "The UTV Invitational has grown into an incredible event every year for many different reasons. We have the rare opportunity to showcase the UTVs and vehicles we have built ourselves and we have the honor to showcase and educate many off-road enthusiasts about our vehicles and the terrain we serve," says Mike Van Aken, founder and event director of the UTV Invitational. Mike is a mentor and teacher of the UTV Invitational for the last 14 years. It was his experience at the UTV Invitational that helped him launch UTV-USA. If it weren't for the vast amount of support he has experienced, Mike would not have the luxury to continue to develop new vehicles and serve in the off-road community. "With many people working hard each year to make this a great event, we cannot do it without the help of the public that supports us. I would not be where I am today without the support of the landscape architects at Park City Mountain Resort, their wonderful campground, and the public that attends the Invitational each year," says Mike. Each year, UTV-USA is proud to serve as a host and supporter of this incredible event. With their help, the UTV

Invitational can continue to thrive and support the sport. "Working with UTV-USA as
